

ABOUT THE ASSOCIATION

The Association for Great Lakes Maritime History is a non-profit association of institutions and individuals from both Canada and the United States who are involved in the preservation and interpretation of the maritime history of the Great Lakes region.

In addition to publishing a bi-monthly newsletter, the Association also holds an annual conference featuring speakers on a wide variety of topics related to the unique maritime history of what have been referred to as the "Inland Seas." The conference also includes roundtable discussions of maritime history research and museum management.

WE WORK TO . . .

- ❖ Encourage research into the maritime history of the Great Lakes by promoting publication and dissemination of information, particularly new research using original sources.
- ❖ Strengthen communication among institutions and individuals by providing a network for the exchange of information and ideas.
- ❖ Promote professional standards for the collection, preservation and exhibition of artifacts and archival material by both institutions and individuals.
- ❖ In cooperation with other organizations and institutions, speak as a unified group to promote the preservation of Great Lakes maritime history.

THE ASSOCIATION FOR GREAT LAKES MARITIME HISTORY IS . . .

Museums, historical societies, research institutions, authors, researchers, individuals and others exchanging information on historic preservation, interpretation, research, exhibitions, collections, publications and other developments involving Great Lakes maritime history.

Founded by leading institutions and individuals from both Canada and the United States, the Association for Great Lakes Maritime History held its first formal meeting in 1984. That meeting has grown into an annual conference hosted by maritime museums and other institutions at sites around the Great Lakes region.

Over the years, the Association's newsletter has grown into an bi-monthly publication covering both news of institutional and individual Association members, and regional and national developments in the field of maritime history. The Association also sponsors an annual awards program to recognize outstanding efforts in Great Lakes maritime history research, preservation and interpretation.
